GINI COWELL

Ms. Cowell, a wildlife conservationist, manages Elephant Aware Masai Mara in southern Kenya with her family and a team of Maasai wildlife rangers. Passionate about creating a future for elephants living in the wild, she educates local populations on how best to co-exist with wildlife productively and in peace.

Notably, to better the lives of young Maasai girls, Elephant Aware Masai Mara pays the fees for them to receive an education through high school.

Born in Kenya, Gini was educated and Nairobi and has travelled to Europe and the U.S. to raise awareness and funds for this unique and exceptional project. She has written for several publications including National Geographic. Her blog can be accessed at elephantawareblog.wordpress.com

For the past 15 years, Elephant Aware has protected elephants, other wildlife and wild habitat in a critical conservation area in Kenya. Employing innovative strategies, the Maasai rangers prevent human-elephant-conflict, engage in anti-poaching efforts, community outreach and education. Supported solely by private donations, Elephant Aware provides a safe refuge for endangered species such as elephants, giraffes, lions and cheetahs. Sponsored by Elephant Aware USA, a 501 (c) (3) For more information visit elephantawareusa.org or email elephantawareusa@gmail.com.
